From @BlakeGopnik for @washingtonpost:

"I couldn't see any real difference between Rothschild and the many artists, good and bad, who made art about our culture's commerce, often by including trademarked goods: There's Warhol and his Campbell's Soups, Coca-Colas and Brillo Boxes, of course, but also the great political artist Hans Haacke, who made works around the trademarks of Marlboro and Mobil — they were in a major New Museum show in 2019 — and the talented photo artist Christopher Williams, whose images of Nikon cameras and other trademarked photo gear made a splash at the Museum of Modern Art in 2014. And there's a whole bunch of less widely known conceptualists working in the Warholian tradition of "business art," who have wanted their artmaking to be easily confused with pure commerce."
